“ Laurie was a favorite instructor of mine at Mercy Hospital School of Nursing, valued for her warm and supportive teaching style and the image of professional nursing that she provided - I aspired to be just like her. After I graduated from there in 1963 and continued my education (also graduating from DePaul University), we became colleagues as we taught together in the last few years before the closure of Mercy Hospital School of Nursing. And still later, we remained colleagues within the Northwest Indiana nursing education community, while Laurie taught at Purdue Calumet and I taught at IU Northwest. Laurie was a significant part of my nursing career, not only as teacher and colleague, but also as friend.
